Going to school

In Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. Here in Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. We believe in giving students the skills and aspirations they need to succeed in life.

Nurturing young talent

We recognize that helping young people achieve their potential is more than just providing formal education. We work with the Metropolitan Youth Orchestra of Hong Kong and the Singapore Chinese Orchestra to give young musicians the opportunity to develop their skills and contribute to their communities. We also fund the contemporary legend theatre, a non-profit that removes children from the streets. In Japan, we work with Lights Of Children to support children in building a better life for themselves.

Creating a quality learning environment for children matters to us. In China, we work with the Akshaya Patra foundation to provide fresh and nutritious midday meals to school-going children, and Ho Chi Minh in Vietnam, where our funding provides free study awards to undergraduates facing financial difficulties. In Indonesia, we fund several entrepreneurial programmes with Born To Be Lights On to support children in building a life for themselves.

Beyond education

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

In the community

Whenever Deutsche Bank does business, we are committed to building stronger and more inclusive communities. In Sri Lanka, we work with Caritas, providing the elderly in rural villages with access to healthcare through mobile eye clinics.

We also fund Bhagwan Mahaveer Viklang Sahayata Samiti, commonly known as Jaipur Foot in India, to rehabilitate people with disabilities by providing artificial limbs, calipers and other aids at no charge.

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

Here in Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. We believe in giving students the skills and aspirations they need to succeed in life.

Making a difference in Asia Pacific

#PositiveImpact

Around the globe, Deutsche Bank employees are making a world of difference to peoples’ lives by sharing their skills and resources.

One in four employees in Asia Pacific volunteer in activities ranging from mentoring young students and building social businesses to building homes and planting trees. As well as giving their time, fundraising by Deutsche Bank employees and businesses in the region contributes hundreds of thousands of euros to various causes every year.

Our employees are passionate about making a difference through social businesses. The programme creates a network of knowledge and mentorship, and workshops, to enable the younger generation to create a sustainable impact.

Made for GOOD

The Deutsche Bank programme for social good

Supporting entrepreneurial ventures that create wider social good is a natural extension of what Deutsche Bank does for businesses of every size and purpose, every day, all over the world.

We fund a social entrepreneurship call to employ and train mothers in Metro Manila, a school in the Philippines offering scholarships to children from low-income families. Profits are invested back into the school, giving children a quality education, and the mothers a livelihood.

We also work with the Society for Rehabilitation and Crime Prevention to build the capacity of its indoor strawberry farm, the first of its kind in Hong Kong. The farm uses new techniques to grow strawberries and vegetables for sale. The business employs individuals with mental disabilities, as well as Jaipur Foot in India, to rehabilitate people with disabilities by providing artificial limbs, calipers and other aids at no charge.

We also fund the Contemporary Legend Theatre, which offers training to at-risk youth, as well as the Gustaf Foundation in Australia, a charity that serves sports to empower disadvantaged kids. We not only wish to train young athletes, but also help them learn important life skills that they can carry forward.

We also fund the Contemporary Legend Theatre, which offers training to at-risk youth, as well as the Gustaf Foundation in Australia, a charity that serves sports to empower disadvantaged kids. We not only wish to train young athletes, but also help them learn important life skills that they can carry forward.

We also work with the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

In Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. Here in Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. We believe in giving students the skills and aspirations they need to succeed in life.

Nurturing young talent

We recognize that helping young people achieve their potential is more than just providing formal education. We work with the Metropolitan Youth Orchestra of Hong Kong and the Singapore Chinese Orchestra to give young musicians the opportunity to develop their skills and contribute to their communities. We also fund the contemporary legend theatre, a non-profit that removes children from the streets. In Japan, we work with Lights Of Children to support children in building a better life for themselves.

Creating a quality learning environment for children matters to us. In China, we work with the Akshaya Patra foundation to provide fresh and nutritious midday meals to school-going children, and Ho Chi Minh in Vietnam, where our funding provides free study awards to undergraduates facing financial difficulties. In Indonesia, we fund several entrepreneurial programmes with Born To Be Lights On to support children in building a life for themselves.

Beyond education

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

In the community

Whenever Deutsche Bank does business, we are committed to building stronger and more inclusive communities. In Sri Lanka, we work with Caritas, providing the elderly in rural villages with access to healthcare through mobile eye clinics.

We also fund Bhagwan Mahaveer Viklang Sahayata Samiti, commonly known as Jaipur Foot in India, to rehabilitate people with disabilities by providing artificial limbs, calipers and other aids at no charge.

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

Here in Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. We believe in giving students the skills and aspirations they need to succeed in life.

Nurturing young talent

We recognize that helping young people achieve their potential is more than just providing formal education. We work with the Metropolitan Youth Orchestra of Hong Kong and the Singapore Chinese Orchestra to give young musicians the opportunity to develop their skills and contribute to their communities. We also support a traditional Chinese opera apprenticeship programme with the Contemporary Legend Theatre, which offers training to at-risk youth, as well as the Gustaf Foundation in Australia, a charity that serves sports to empower disadvantaged kids. We not only wish to train young athletes, but also help them learn important life skills that they can carry forward.

We also fund the contemporary legend theatre, a non-profit that removes children from the streets. In Japan, we work with Lights Of Children to support children in building a better life for themselves.

Creating a quality learning environment for children matters to us. In China, we work with the Akshaya Patra foundation to provide fresh and nutritious midday meals to school-going children, and Ho Chi Minh in Vietnam, where our funding provides free study awards to undergraduates facing financial difficulties. In Indonesia, we fund several entrepreneurial programmes with Born To Be Lights On to support children in building a life for themselves.

Beyond education

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.

In the community

Whenever Deutsche Bank does business, we are committed to building stronger and more inclusive communities. In Sri Lanka, we work with Caritas, providing the elderly in rural villages with access to healthcare through mobile eye clinics.

We also fund Bhagwan Mahaveer Viklang Sahayata Samiti, commonly known as Jaipur Foot in India, to rehabilitate people with disabilities by providing artificial limbs, calipers and other aids at no charge.

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and Ho Chi Minh in Vietnam, where our funding provides free study awards to undergraduates facing financial difficulties. In Indonesia, we fund several entrepreneurial programmes with Born To Be Lights On to support children in building a life for themselves.

Here in Asia Pacific, we work with various partners to provide educational opportunities to young people. We believe in giving students the skills and aspirations they need to succeed in life.

Nurturing young talent

We recognize that helping young people achieve their potential is more than just providing formal education. We work with the Metropolitan Youth Orchestra of Hong Kong and the Singapore Chinese Orchestra to give young musicians the opportunity to develop their skills and contribute to their communities. We also support a traditional Chinese opera apprenticeship programme with the Contemporary Legend Theatre, which offers training to at-risk youth, as well as the Gustaf Foundation in Australia, a charity that serves sports to empower disadvantaged kids. We not only wish to train young athletes, but also help them learn important life skills that they can carry forward.

We also fund the contemporary legend theatre, a non-profit that removes children from the streets. In Japan, we work with Lights Of Children to support children in building a better life for themselves.

Creating a quality learning environment for children matters to us. In China, we work with the Akshaya Patra foundation to provide fresh and nutritious midday meals to school-going children, and Ho Chi Minh in Vietnam, where our funding provides free study awards to undergraduates facing financial difficulties. In Indonesia, we fund several entrepreneurial programmes with Born To Be Lights On to support children in building a life for themselves.

Beyond education

In the region, millions of young people lack access to basic education, lack access to higher education, lack the skills and aspirations that they need to succeed in life. That’s why we also support non-profits such as the Akshaya Patra Foundation in India, which provides midday meals to school-going children, and its Children’s Hospital in the Philippines, where our funding provides free medical care to children enrolled in financial need programmes. Our wish is to help young people break out of the many cycles that limit their prospects.